People Urged To Right Acts By Conscience

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The human conscience sometimes makes men do many strange things. Among these is the particular act or decision to ease one's conscience by making restitution for a fancied or real theft or deception.

For instance, the White House recently received a letter the other day which said:

"Enclosed is 5 cents which I owe the government. I smoked one on the Atlantic in a boat I dropped a nickel overboard. Here is another one to put back in the mint."

Officials believe the letter was written in all sincerity, that there was nothing facetious about it. Many federal agencies get letters from people with guilty consciences and most of the letters contain money. If they do, they go to the "conscience fund" under the treasury's bureau of accounts; Joseph A. Woodson, chief of the agency, ends up in the general federal kitty and is spent.

Started in 1811

First known contributions to the conscience fund were during the administration of President Madison back in 1811. The total that year was $250. For the fiscal year 1948 it was $124,168.53.

Some people sign their names; others do not. A great many say they have found religion, and with it a pang of conscience for some past wrong.

A few jokesters are involved. Like the woman who sent 5c in stamps "to be applied against our 251 billion dollar public debt."

The letters, though, are not funny to the conscience fund people who maintain a large office on the fourth floor of the treasury building and keep an elaborate file and bookkeeping system on such matters. Each signed letter is answered politely.

The current crop of notes contains many from former servicemen.

One sent a money order for $30 to pay for property he stole while wearing an army uniform. Another had filched "a bunch of light bulbs" from the navy. "I don't know how many," he said, "but I think $10 will cover it."

Returns $2.62

A marine declared he had been overpaid by $2.62 at the time of his discharge. He returned it, plus 10c in interest.

A soldier said he had walked out of a separation center (somehow) with his discharge papers in one hand and a blanket in the other. He sent $17.50 with a notation that "it was such a poor drum it couldn't have been worth more than that."

A woman not long ago mailed in $150 in cash. She explained that she owed the government that much and had sent the amount in before. "I didn't receive any reply from you the first time, so here it is again." She didn't sign her name to either letter.

Sometimes the amount is small, but in the past startled clerks have opened plain envelopes containing as much as $30,000.

Hypnotic Therapy Credited With Curing Amnesia Case

NEW YORK CITY. — Hypnotic therapy has been credited with restoring memory to a New Rochelle housewife who apparently had been suffering from total amnesia for the past nine years.

The patient was Mrs. Emily Norton, 39, mother of two young children. She was reunited in New Rochelle with two of her brothers who arrived from Braddock, Pa., her former home which had been erased from her mind.

Details of the cure were told by Dr. Nathaniel E. Selby, who placed the young matron in her domestic state. He said that when she came to him last Thursday she could remember nothing of her past save that she had hunted on a street in Philadelphia in 1942, was unable to identify herself and started life anew as a waitress.

Four years ago she met and married John A. Norton in New Rochelle. They had two children, Robert, 3, and Melaine, aged 1. Fearful of delving into her past, she had told her husband she was an orphan. She came to Dr. Selby for diagnosis and treatment of headaches.

The phychiatrist said that under ordinary questioning Mrs. Norton could remember only the names of "Kybski" and Braddock, Pa.

Dr. Selby communicated with the Braddock police. They told him an Emily Kobalanski had disappeared in 1940 and had never been found. The family, consisting of father, mother, four brothers and a sister, were dubious after having checked so many fruitless clues. But they told the doctor Emily had a small scar on her forehead.

When Mrs. Norton visited him Tuesday, Dr. Selby saw the scar. It was then that he hypnotized her and, he said, "she had a full return of memory," except that some details of her past between 1940 and 1942 still remain to be cleared up.

80 Acres Prize Wheat Harvested by 'Mistake'

CHEYENNE WELLS, COL.—Lloyd Meis of this community discovered that 80 acres of his prize wheat had been harvested while he was working on another part of the farm.

Naturally disturbed, he sought out legal aid to determine where his wheat had gone.

Sheriff Ed Byers went to work on the case. It didn't take him long to come up with the facts. The wheat "thieves," he learned, were transient harvest hands employed by a neighboring farmer. They had harvested Meis' wheat by mistake.

The wheat was located at a nearby elevator and was credited to Meis' account.

Goose Skins With Down On Available Soon

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Goose skins, never an important commercial item in the past, may soon prove to be of great value to the poultry farmers of the nation.

Goose skin production has been hampered by two things: Not enough geese and lack of a practical way to tan or preserve the delicate skin. Exhibitors at the international baby chick association convention showed how these two obstacles now may be overcome.

First an incubator company of Gettysburg, Ohio, displayed an incubator to hatch goose eggs. Ray Eversmire, vice-president of the company, explained that before this the hatching has been up to the harvest geese. Regular incubators don't work with goose eggs, he said.

Tanning Technique

Then a goose farm of Zarephath, N.J., demonstrated a tanning process for the goose skin. To skin a goose, you first pull the feathers off carefully, leaving the thick fuzzy down in place. Next you separate the skin, with down attached, from the body of the goose. Then you tan it by the patented process.

Tanned and with the down still attached, goose skins can be used for powder puffs, baby booties, trim on women's hats and negligees, baby caps and the like. Poultrymen at the convention said there was a big future for goose skins. They said the down holds onto powder, for example, just the way it should to make an ideal puff.

The Petersime incubator has a device which turns the geese eggs. The temperature and humidity are controlled to make things ideal for the hatched geese. And, Peterssime said, the incubator has "a mild breathing air movement."

Future Bright

Other poultrymen at the convention said the future is bright in the goose business. Cotton farmers are discovering, for example, that geese will eat the grass and weeds in their fields but not the cotton.

Run down on their skins, they said, can be colored pink, blue or whatever the buyer wants. A goose skin is about the size of an open telephone book and, once tanned, is fairly durable.

George Scheuffle, proprietor of the goose farm, also exhibited a method of canning goose meat. Other goose experts among the 1,500 poultrymen here for the convention said that incubator hatched geese produced geese can be kept until they are old enough to lay eggs in quantity. Then they can be killed, they said, and every part of the bird be used. The feathers can stuff pillows, the skins can be tanned and the meat can be cooked or canned.

Ghost Town Restoration Paying Good Dividends

RALEIGH, N. C.—Fontana village in the Great Smoky mountains of North Carolina is one ghost town that refused to remain an uninhabited country crumbling to dust. Instead, its homes and business buildings have been reconverted into resort properties until the entire village is one huge hotel.

Deep in the heart of the Smokies, and off the beaten path, Fontana village lies at the end of a nine-mile scenic highway which extends from federal highway 129 along the entire line of the Little Tennessee river. There is no "beyond."

In a setting of 50 green acres at 1,800 feet elevation, rimmed by mountains that rise another 1,500 feet, are 300 houses and cottages facing wide, shaded streets that wander up hill and down.

Fontana village was built by TVA for the use of its employes while a mile distant Fontana dam (TVA's largest) was under construction. When the dam was completed, the employes departed and the village became a ghost town.

A private organization in Washington, D. C., saw the possibilities which Fontana village offered, and it came to life again "a-courtin' the tourist trade."

And the idea took, with the result that three-quarters of a million people representing every state in the union and 35 foreign countries visited the village last year.

Dead-Eye Ball-Tosser Leaves Out Concession

PALISADES PARK, N. J.—It was a tough day for the ball-throwing concessionaire here. Sixteen-year-old Bobby Pritchard, Newark, completely cleaned out the concession by knocking down 3,000 consecutive milk bottles.

The youth won every prize on the concession's shelves for the first time in the history of the amusement park, and walked away with more than 400 assorted stuffed animals, figurine dolls, and pieces of china. He had three cabs to take his prizes home.

The concessionaire, who had to build a warehouse to get additional prizes for later business, said young Prichard spent only $1, and he took many free throws in the set prizes.

Arkansas Farmers May Grow Drugs

New Plants to Produce Narcotics, Digitalis

A drug-farming program which may free the United States from reliance on foreign sources for many vital medicinal compounds has been launched in Arkansas by a transplanted Rumanian chemist, reports the magazine "Industrial and Engineering Chemistry."

Dr. O. K. Cosla, a biochemist who instituted the first successful cultivation of drug-bearing plants in Rumania, is in charge of the Arkansas program at the College of the Ozarks, Clarksville, where a 30-acre tract has been set aside for his experiments.

Dr. Cosla, who has an M. D. degree as well as a Ph. D. in biochemistry, used to export to the United States part of its drug supply, and during World War II he furnished southeastern Europe with medicinal materials.

If Dr. Cosla's plans mature, Arkansas farmers will soon begin supplying the nation with such drugs as belladonna, a narcotic; stramonium, a drug processed from dried Jimson weed which gives relief to asthma sufferers, and ergot, used to control blood hemorrhages and as an anesthetic. Foxglove, the dotted white and purple tubular flower whose leaves bear the powerful heart stimulant digitalis, will also soon be blooming in Dr. Cosla's medical garden.

Some of the drug-bearing plants which Dr. Cosla is planning to cultivate already grow wild in the Arkansas backwoods. To determine the best conditions for growing each plant as a domestic crop, the Rumanian chemist will test them in hydroponic installations, in which their roots will be immersed in a watery solution containing mineral nutrients, instead of in soil.

The active drugs will be extracted from the plants in a four-room laboratory which Dr. Cosla brought with him to this country to aid his research in biochemistry and experimental pharmacology.

Dr. Cosla believes, according to "Industrial and Engineering Chemistry," that the South can eventually become one of the nation's principal drug farming and manufacturing centers, thus diverting to the area millions of dollars now spent annually on imports.

Handy Cart

Elgar Schroeder, Morrisonville, Wisconsin, believes a handy farm gadget can have an attractive appearance while saving work for its owner. His pull-push cart carries a good-size load the tools, supplies or produce easily. The cart was made from a child's discarded coaster wagon, using the box and wheels. The original wagon axle was kept, the cart was built of ¾ inch pipe. Time required to build the cart was two and one-half hours at a cost of $1 for materials. Are welding played an important part in the cart's construction.

Corn in Silage Form Answer to Extra Crop

Corn in the form of silage is the solution for the extra crop— and a trench silo is the cheapest and easiest way to provide for making and storing of silage.

The trench silo is especially recommended for those who need to provide storage space hurriedly. However, areas having extremely high water tables or soil that is sandy or loose are not suitable, according to a dairy specialist.
